Giant Paperclip Falls From Sky

On December 24, 2009, a giant, neon orange paper clip fell from the sky. Though the origins of the estimated 40 foot office supply are unknown, the residents of the town the paperclip fell in to are speculating that extraterrestrial life forms are the cause of this event. Witnesses say that the paperclip simply "dropped out of the sky."

Because of the weight of the paperclip and the height of the initial drop off point, the paperclip is embedded in to the ground. The police have hired the local crane company to drag the office supply out of the ground.

Scientists have inspected the visible part of the paperclip. There doesn't seem to be DNA on the metal and there are minimal scratches. They have concluded that the paperclip is not of human origin. Scientists are still running tests and there will be more answers to follow.

But the question is, "Why is the paperclip here and how did it get here?"

Article written by Gwen Cusing